INDIVISIBLE SF IS “UN-ENDORSING” PROP 24

real estate mogul Alastair Mactaggart’s flawed pay-for-privacy initiative*

SAN FRANCISCO – Indivisible SF, a volunteer-led organization that works to resist Trump’s agenda and promote progressive values, made an announcement with the title, “We are changing our position on Prop 24 to NO.”

Their announcement states: “It’s billed as a privacy reform measure, but as we’ve read more about it, we’ve learned that many of the “reforms” are loopholes that would further entrench a “pay-for-privacy” economy and otherwise weaken California’s privacy protections. We are now a NO on 24.”

The announcement goes on to say, “Our own members have noted that proponents of the measure talk in vague terms about privacy issues, whereas the opponents talk about specific problems with the proposed legislation. This is a good sign of bad legislation.”

Proposition 24 weakens California’s 2018 landmark privacy law, creates a toothless new state privacy bureaucracy, and will cost California consumers and small businesses billions.

Indivisible SF joins a growing list of opposition including 18 editorial boards, 10 Democratic clubs across California, as well as consumer, privacy, social justice, and small business advocates opposing Proposition 24 including Color of Change, ACLU of California, Consumer Federation of California, Californians For Privacy Now, labor icon Dolores Huerta, Council on American-Islamic Relations, California Alliance for Retired Americans, the California Small Business Association, the California Nurses Association, and the League of Women Voters.
